my coat tails trailing in the dust, most humily do I approach thee. I am the Publicity Man. No up to date state can get on in this interesting age without a Publicity Man; and as I have not much of anything else to do I have elected myself to that important position. You see it is this way: Senator Aldrich has taught us that the way to revise the tariff downward is to push up the duties. Now, I have pondered long on this subject, because I am in training for the same senate that Aldrich runs, and I have come to the conclusion that when I want to get down cellar the only way to get revised downward into the cellar is to climb the attic stairs. That looks reasonable to you, I know, because you have adopted the Aldrich method of revising the tariff downward.

"Most exalted sire, quite recently it has come to my notice that you have revised the tariff toward Norwich and New London downward. Formerly we could buy a round trip ticket for 40 cents, whereas under the Aldrich method of revision downward we must pay 30 cents each way, or 60 cents the round trip.

"When I attended the little red schoolhouse on the hillside we were taught that to increase the price of a thing from 40 cents to 60 cents meant a raise of 50 per cent., or, in homely phrases, 'a half as much again.' Exalted sire, we complain not of your Aldrich revision of the tariff to New London; for over here in Norwich we are all millionaires. And what is 60 cents when we walk a ride to New London and back? Why did you not revise the tariff downward from 40 cents to a dollar? Then the ticket agent would not have the over-making change. This would save his time and as time is money you could revise his salary upward by cutting it down just that much. It's a poor rule that won't work both ways.

"I am glad Senator Aldrich has his great discovery of downward revision.
Here the Publicity Man will relate for your amusement a coincidence. The very day that your revision from 40 cents to 60 cents went into effect, from fifty to seventy-five of our millionaires were engaged in the construction of another building to hold the over-increasing income of our highly civilized state, each and every one of them stopped short when the ticket agent announced your revision downward.
These millionaires did not care about the little additional charge for getting to their work, but they all remembered at that moment that they longed to view the beautiful scenery over the hill, and so they one and all left their railway station and took the backrupt Westley trail. Was it not curious that they all wanted to view the scenery in sight? He was a monopolist, although he held no charter by consent of the untaxed lobby. His name was Noah. It appeared that the heavy traffic rendered his stage unsafe and unfit and it went into the scrap heap where it has ever since remained till you revised it into a passenger coach.

"The Publicity Man would advise you to revise your tariff downward once more. Shove up the price another one hundred per cent. and out of the increased revenue buy a few tallow dips for Mr. Noah's coach. It is the duty of other days to enable us millionaires to find our way out after sundown.

"Have you seen anything of the Great Unstaggered?
"CHARLES F. THAYER."
"Postscript—It was no easy job to trace the genealogy of your coach back to Noah's ark. There ought to be a public service commission to do this
